Subject: For A. McNatt: Indie Band "Amble" rise to fame on Hozier tour

Ms. McNatt:

Imagine a group of ordinary Irish men taking to the states on tour with a folk/soul icon, launching their band to fame. Amble just recently passed through Pittsburgh before joining Hozier on his stop in Hershey, Pennsylvania.

Amble's stop in Pittsburgh and rising fame is the perfect story for the Pittsburgh Music Magazine. Your mission of highlighting underrepresented artists could not align more, as the band received no coverage for their night at Craffthouse Stage & Grill. Your coverage of the Plain White T's and Pollyanna in Lawrenceville not only craft a well-executed and interesting article but proved your ability to feature the headlining artist as well as their opener with equal interest. Amble's show will also cater to your Pittsburgh-based readership and hearing about the artists passing through their beloved city. Regardless of geography, Amble's backstory is a heartwarming and inspiring one: the men coming from jobs in education and data science and now touring with Hozier. The story features an element of timeliness as their new EP, Hand Me Downs, just released on September 26, 2025, just under two weeks after their Pittsburgh show.

We are offering Amble's story exclusively to Pittsburgh Music Magazine, so I would require a decision by November 2nd if you are interested. I can guarantee full access to the band for any writers or photographers involved. We also have access to Hozier's team and photographer, Kate Cummings. Our team has an extensive gallery of photos and videos from both the Pittsburgh stop and stops on tour with Hozier.
